MACE,

A post office of Montgomery county.

MADISON,

Is situated on the north bank of the Ohio river, 81 miles south south-east of Indianapolis, in latitude 38° 46′ north, longitude 85° 21′ west, 100 miles below Cincinnati, and 50 miles above the city of Louisville. The city is beautifully situated in a valley of near three miles in length, which is enclosed on the north by hills rising in height near four hundred feet. The city is situated some fifty feet above the highest floods. It has a population now of 12,000 inhabitants; is noted for its beauty, being one of the best built cities in all the West; is very healthy, and in this respect surpasses all other towns in the State.

Of the early history of Madison we learn the original proprietors were John Paul, Jonathan Lyon and others. Settlements were founded here as early as 1808. The first sale of town lots was made at public auction on February 11th and 12th, in 1811. Col. Jno. Vawter acting as the auctioneer. The valley near the city was densely timbered, the growth being poplar, walnut, beach, sugartree, and cottonwood. On the river banks willows were growing to the water's edge.

The first white child born here was Dawson Blackmore, Jr., and now living in the city.

The following are the names of a number of the earlier settlers of Madison previous to 1820, with the date of their coming: Milton Stapp, July, 1816; Jeremiah Sullivan, fall of 1817; C. P. J. Arvin, April, 1815; Daniel Wilson, March, 1818; Thomas Brown, October, 1817; Nicholas D. Grover, June, 1815; Geo. W. Leonard, 1817; Moody Park, January, 1818; Victor King, September, 1815; Charles W. Basnett, March, 1818; William Brown, 1819; D. Blackmore, sen., 1810; D. Blackmore, jr., 1812; Silas Ritchie, 1813; Jno. Sering, 1811; Jno. G. Sering, 1816; Wm. G. Wharton, 1817; W. J. McClure, 1815; John Ritchie, 1213; S. C. Stevens, 1813; Howard Watts, 1813; John Haney, 1813; Rufus Gale, 1813; William Randall, 1811; Gamaliel Taylor, 1819; E. G. Whitney, 1819; M. Shannon, 1817; Edward Shannon, 1817; Jesse D. Bright, 1820; Michael G. Bright, 1820; David Bright, 1820; Jacob Wildman, 1814; George Wagoner, 1811; Andrew Woodfill, 1816; Alexander Washer, 1819; Williamson Dunn, 1809; Wm. McKee Dunn, 1814; James Vawter, 1807; John Hunt, 1813; Simeon Hunt, 1813; Cornelius Vaile, 1817; Geo. Short, 1816, and David McClure, 1815.

Nearly all of these persons enumerated became permanent citizens, and a good number of them are now living here or in the vicinity.

Madison is an active commercial mart of considerable importance, having many local advantages. Being at the extreme northern line of the great bend of the Ohio River, is nearer to the rich and fertile districts of the central part of the State than any other important town on the river. Iron, coal, salt, groceries, and merchandize, intended for the interior of the State, find at Madison the shortest railroad communication offered by any city on the river. Jefferson county, of which Madison is the county seat, is one of the most populous and wealthy counties in the State, and has an area of 362 square miles. The northern and central portions are nearly level. The soil of the river bottoms and hill is calcareous, and very fertile. A large district of country on the Kentucky side of the river is very populous, containing some of the most highly cultivated farms in the valley of the Ohio, and is naturally connected with Madison for all purposes of trade.

Within a circuit of twenty miles of the city there are thirty villages and seven county towns; there are five plank and macadamized roads leading out of the city; Hanover College is within five miles of the city, an institution of high and well-earned reputation; a steam ferry boat plies to the Kentucky shore, at Milton, opposite Madison; the busy town of North Madison with its machine shops, agricultural implement manufactories, fair grounds, and fine roads in all directions; the best Court House in the State; two spacious market houses, public school houses, three banks, three fire engine houses, eighteen churches, six hotels, and commodious wharves and wharf-boats. The streets are finely graded and graveled. Every street is perfectly drained; well paved walks, with stone flags at the crossings. Gas works, streets lighted; water works owned by the city, with a supply of water from an elevated head, (at the Clifton Springs,) affording an ample supply of water for manufacturing purposes, for families, and a complete protection against fire. There are a large number of schools, public and private, a seminary for young ladies, an academy for boys under the charge of competent teachers, township and county library; an incorporated library, open at all hours of the day, containing several thousand volumes of books; four banking establishments, two local insurance offices, a number of foreign insurance agencies, and a large amount of private capital. There are large wholesale jobbing houses in dry goods, hardware, boots and shoes, groceries, iron, drugs, queensware, &c. More than thirty engines are employed in the various manufacturing establishments; there are five large flouring mills. Madison is a large flour market; receives vast quantities of flour, wheat and corn from the interior of the State. Large quantities of Pennsylvania, Virginia, and Ohio coal are sold at the extensive coal yards, to go to the interior of the State by railroad. Timber is abundant; the oak is peculiar for its rigid qualities, and is unsurpassed for the purposes of ship and steamboat building, farming implements and all other purposes; poplar lumber and shingles are largely exported to St. Louis and Frankfort, Ky.; large quantities of furniture and cooperage are manufactured and exported. The provision trade is very extensive; some of the largest pork packing establishments in the west are located here. Madison brands of pork, lard and bacon have the highest reputation. Marine railway and boat yard, three large foundries and machine shops, railroad car works, engine builders, brass foundry, veneer mills, planing mills; starch, candle and soap factories; glue factories; fanmill, saddle-tree, carriage and implement makers; extensive breweries, tanneries and distilleries are located in and near the city. Vineyards are extensively cultivated in this vicinity. Below is a statement of the commerce in 1857:
